CONTRACT NOW IN HANDS OF GLASS COMPANY'S ATTORNEYS FOR APPROVAL

The contract which is to be signed by the Imperial Glass Company was drawn up yesterday by the Charleroi committee appointed for that purpose and sent to Pittsburg for the attorneys of the company to examine and sign. This will probably take a matter of three or four days before it is acted upon and returned to Charleroi. While it cannot be stated as a fact that matters will now go along without scarcely a hitch, it is thought that agreements can be reached without much effort.

The committee which had in charge the drafting of the contract was Messrs. J. K. Tener, R. H. Rush and Kerfoot W. Daly. Attorney D. M. McCloskey drew up the paper for them.

The committees in Charleroi can not do anything but wait until the contract is either signed or refused. It will hardly be the latter however. After that part of the work is done everything will be in good shape, and the principal part of the business done towards the preliminaries of having the Imperial company locate here.

MONONGAHELA RAILROAD BEING THOROUGHLY INSPECTED TODAY

Officials In Special Train Going Over Tracks Above Brownsville.

To care for the safety of trainmen on the Monongahela Railroad will be given a thorough inspection today. Particular attention will be paid to the overhead bridges and arches. Superintendent G. B. Obey of Brownsville will lead the party and will go over the road in the clearance car of the Pennsylvania Railroad. As soon as the work is completed new orders will be issued to the men, instructing them to look out for dangerous places.

To Build Store Buildings.

Contracts have been let by the Union Supply Company for erection of four store buildings in Fayette County. The buildings are to be located at the Ralph, the Sarah, the Palmer and the Filbert plants of the H. C. Frick Coke Company. A sign of the future prospects of the company is evidenced in the specifications, which call for the buildings to be of brick and two stories high. It was only a few years ago that the stores of this company were entirely frame structures. The prospects for a half century of operations in the Fayette county district have caused the company to build permanent structures. The stores will be 80x100 feet in size, and will cost $15,000 each. The ground floor will be devoted to store rooms, while the second floors will be used as offices and storage rooms. Work will start on the building at once, and they will be completed before January 1. The contract price is $60,000 for the four structures.

FINLANDER JAILED FOR THIRTY DAYS REMAINS ONE HOUR

Released After Friends Pay Fine Of $1 And Costs.

Carel Macowitch, a Finlander, of Charleroi, had the unique distinction of serving a sentence in the county jail at Washington yesterday but for an hour, after having been sent up for 30 days. At a hearing before Justice Wilson, Macowitch was adjudged guilty of assault and battery, and sentenced to pay $1 and costs or go to jail for thirty days. The information was made by Steve Uhore. Not having the ready cash to pay the fine and costs which were considerable the man chose the latter, 30 days in jail and was taken over yesterday morning. Soon after the officer and his man had left some friends of Macowitch appeared and settled with the Justice by paying the fine and costs. A release was sent to Washington at once and the man was let go, returning to Chaleroi last night.

FAIRMONT GETS THE LAST ONE

Mr. Hunt Positively Refuses To Allow Liberties With His Benders.

W. HUMPHRIES HEAVES

Hit Hard Throughout Game—Bingles Thirteen Off Him.

Charleroi didn't take their batting eye to the park with them yesterday afternoon and as a consequence drew the short end with the Fairmont aggregation. One Mr. Hunt was the one to inform them that an exceptionally good eye would be needed and he kept his word by allowing four scattered singles, not a man getting past second base.

Willis Humphries was selected by Osborne as the heaver for the Cherubs. While he was touched up pretty lively in the first three rounds the Mountaineers did not cross the gum until the fourth, making one in this round on one for for three bases by Snodgrass and a clean single by Haught. They broke into the run column in the next round by Fisher singling and Hunt sacrificing him to second. Core made two on by getting soaked in the ribs and when Parker hit one run came over. In the sixth and seventh they drew blanks but in the eighth Keener thought it best to score and proceeded to drive the leather over the right field fence for the entire circuit. The next two men following Keener singled but the hit to score them failed to appear. In the ninth with one down, Core picked out a nice one, and to keep in the game King followed suit, sending Core to third, from where he scored on a drive by Parker, which also sent King to third. Keener tried hard for another safe one but popped up a foul which Dailey pulled in. Snodgrass ended the inning by flying to O'Hare. Score:

TRUE BILL FOUND IN INSURANCE CASE

Monongahela Men Defendants In Suit Brought By V. D. Shannon.

CALIFORNIA MAN HELD

Harry Paxton Must Undergo Trial For Forgery.

Important cases before the grand jury yesterday and in which true bills were found, were those of the commonwealth against J. T. Biddle and against Lee Hepler, both well known residents of Monongahela. They are charged with unlawfully transacting business as an agent of a foreign insurance copmany, and advertising as agents of an unauthorized insurance company. The private prosecutor in both prosecutions is V. D. Shannon of Fallowfield.

Messrs. Biddle and Hepler represented the Eureka Life Insurance company, incorporated under the laws of Virginia, and the prosecution is brought on the grounds that the Eureka Life Insurance company had not qualified in this state according to law and therefore was a foreign company, and had not a right to establish an office or offices or appoint agents in this state.

It is understood that the prosecutions grow out of dissatisfaction of parties who had taken stock in the insurance company represented by the defendants.

True bills were found in all the cases against Harry G. Paxton, of California, there being two counts in each case, he being charged with forgery and uttering and publishing false statements. He was caught in Charleroi a few months ago and taken to California where he was given a hearing. He furnished bail for court.

High School at Bentleyville.

Bentleyville, Aug. 13.—Examinations for the entrance to the new high school which will be established at this place, will be held at the public school building on September 4, by the teacher Prof. Charles McCormick, of Waynesburg. It is requested by the board of education that all persons in the borough or the adjoining townships who wish to enter the high school be present at this meeting to take the preliminary examinations.

This will be the first year of the high school in the borough and already a large number of students have stated that they will take the examinations for entrance. It is expected that the school will have a large class as the school is situated in a thriving community which appreciates the advantage of good educational facilities.

SPECIAL SIGNIFICANCE ATTACHED TO VISIT OF STEEL OFFICIALS

Significance is attached to the visit of Mr. Dinkey and two other head officials of the Carnegie Steel Company to Donora today, it being thought they are there to make arrangements for the reopening of the works which have been closed down for many months. These three men arrived this morning on the 9:50 train at that place and left in automobiles for a tour of the town, after which they returned to the works near the railroad, and made a general review of the factory. Little information could be learned from the officials but it is generally thought that the trip to Donora will mean the starting of fires not later than the first of September, and probably sooner.

The Duquesne mills of the Carnegie company closed down very recently for two months during which time repairs will be made and that means that the works either at Donora or South Sharon will have to be started and indications point to the former.

METHODIST AND BAPTIST SUNDAY SCHOOLS PICNIC

Yesterday the Sunday schools from the Methodist and Baptist churches held their annual picnics at Lynns' Grove, near Belle Vernon, a large number attending and passing an enjoyable day in the woods. Special cars at 9 and 10 o'clock, conveying people to the grove, Both young and old attended and made merry by games of various kinds. In the morning a ball game was a feature, between the married and single men, and another contest was played in the afternoon. Races by the little folk in the afternoon proved an interesting diversion. Regular old fashioned picnic dinner and supper were served. The special cars for home left at 6 o'clock, although many persons becoming tired left before that time.

FINLEYVILLE IS CERTAINLY DRY

During the entire summer the region about Finleyville has had but little rain, getting but a sprinkle when other parts of the county were deluged and as a result a water famine has set in. The Nottingham mine has been forced to suspend on account of lack of water. An attempt was made to continue by using sulphur water from a creek, in the boilers but this was found impossible as the action of the sulphur soon put the machinery out of business. The B. and O. railroad company is also in need of water and unless rain comes soon they will be forced to haul water from the regions of plenty.

The draught extends for a considerable distance on either side of Finleyville and is causing the farmers in that immediate vicinity considerable worry on account of their grain crops. This will be the first very dry spell for nearly three years and it will be remembered three years ago the railroad company was forced to haul water. Tanks for the watering of passenger trains are located at Finleyville.

ENTHUSIASTIC MEETING OF VARIOUS COMMITTEES

The committees having in charge the preparations for the Old Home Week at Monongahela, beginning September 7, held a meeting last night and various reports were heard. The finance committee gave a most excellent report, funds coming in surprisingly. The contract for the erection of a court of Honor was let.

GUTHRIE CASE VS B. AND O. TO BE HEARD SOON

The suit of Miliarc G. Guthrie and Elizabeth Guthrie against the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad company, an action for the recovery of the sum of $10,000 damages on account of the killing of the Guthrie child at the Bell avenue crossing, Claysville, will likely be heard in the United States circuit court.

McIlvaine and Clark, attorneys for the railroad company yesterday presented a petition to the court praying for an order for removing the case to the United States circuit. Accompanying the petition was a bond for $10,000 for the company's entering in the court on the first day of its next session and for paying all costs that may be awarded by the court, if the court shall hold that the case was wrongfully or improperly removed thereto.

ROYAL ARCANUM, 1240, ENTERTAINS FOR ITS MEMBERS

Charleroi lodge 1240, Royal Arcanum last evening after the regular semi-monthly business meeting held a social session, which was one of the most enjoyable affairs ever given by the order to its members here. Three candidates were initiated District Deputy Eisler having charge of the initating. A large number of guests were present from Monongahela, Elizabeth, Belle Vernon and Fayette City. The Royal Arcanum quartet entertained with several selections, and there was some instrumental music.

The Royal Arcanum lodge, 1240, now numbers 145 members, and is still growing. It is one of the most prosperous and thriving orders of the town.

Let Us Honor Them.

During next week in different parts of the country two reunions of veterans will be held, one of the few remaining survivors of the Ringgold cavalry, that body of brave men which rendered service of such everlasting benefit to their country in the great war between the North and South, and the other the 54th and 63rd regiments of the volunteers of Pennsylvania, in the struggle of the sixties, the American Veterans of Foreign Service and United States Reserves of the more recent Spanish-American War. The Ringgold command naturally will claim the most attention of the people in this section for the reason that it was principally from these parts that body of staunch men was chosen; also for the reason of their reunion which was held in Charleroi last year in the month of August. This year West Middletown have the distinction of entertaining the Ringgold men, the date being August 20. There are a very few of this command now living and those that do survive are gray haired and feeble.

The reunion of the other commands is in charge of the American Veterans of Foreign service and the United States Reserves who are doing a most praiseworthy thing in affording an opportunity for their older comrades, members of the 54th and 63rd, Vols. Pa., who served in the war of the rebellion, a chance to again meet with each other and clasp hands with their old mates, possibly for the last time. Quite a number of those who have seen service, of the Monongahela Valley will attend this monster reunion at Olympia park and not only try to have a good time themselves but furnish enjoyment for their comrades whether young or old. Let us honor them all.

Monessen this week has a bad attack. Of what, did you say? Oh, yes, a carnival, of course. The aggregation is known, when they're out of debt and on the road with prospects of doing a big business and hauling in cash and over hand, as the Smith Greater Carnival Company, spectacular, stupendous nerve-thrilling awe-inspiring, biggest on the face of the globe, [illegible] etc. Charleroi had an attack last year and has succeeded in getting over it at [illegible] ge, Brownsville, California and other towns along the river which have had adjectival affairs of the kind for a few days during the summer, in their midst are just now recovering. What the people of those villages say of carnivals is a plenty. It's more nerve-thrilling and awe-inspiring than the immense, (per add manager) show itself, to hear them say lovely, no, but hard things, tempered with a few expressions not found in the old Mosaic law.

DOLLIE AND THE MANEATER.

By Colin S. Collins.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

"I can't help it because I am rich, can I?"

Paul Vinton spoke of his wealth as though it were a thing accursed. Dollie Darcy shook her head with judicial solemnity.

"I don't suppose that you can," she admitted. "At the same time, Paul, you cannot blame me for taking an interest in people who do things."

"Such as waiting on table?" retorted Vinton. "I don't see anything to command respectful admiration in a job like that."

"But he is a college man," reminded Dollie. "Just fancy a student so anxious to learn that he will wait on table in a hotel to gain the funds for his tuition!"

"He would do well to go to a grammar school first," growled Vinton. "He waited on me this morning and when I asked for eggs he told me that 'the eggs isn't very fresh.' That's good grammar for a college student, and then his slang is something weird."

"George Ade uses slang," cited Dollie defensively. "I'm sure that no one ever accused Mr. Ade of being common."

"Because he keeps his slang for his books and plays," reminded Vinton.

Dollie checked the sharp speech that sprang to her lips and hurried down the piazza steps to join a bespectacled youth who appeared around the corner of the hotel.

He was not an inviting sort of person. One ear was considerably larger than the other and an aggressive chin [illegible]

"[illegible]"

[illegible] in the hotel. There was something almost pathetic to her in the idea of this man who maltreated the English language so brutally seeking a higher education, and she found his personality interesting and at times amusing.

There were other times when the man bored her sadly, but she would not confess that she found him tiresome lest Paul should think the victory lay with him.

Every evening when the tables had been cleared and the dining room put in order Brady would slip down to the beach and walk or sit with Dollie, while Vinton sat on the piazza and vowed that he would leave the place for some better resort where the waiters were not the fad of the moment.

He never went, for on second thoughts he told himself it would be better to stay on and look after Dollie. She must tire of her fad presently, and perhaps on the rebound he might induce her to say the coveted "Yes."

Dismally Vinton realized that the waiting game was bound to be a long one, and chancing upon Dollie waiting on the sands for her waiter protege Paul was moved to reopen his argument.

Following an unusually hot day the humidity of an approaching storm deprived the sufferers of the relief of the night breezes. Dollie was tired and irritable and in no frame of mind for an argument. Both raised their voices slightly above the pitch of good breeding, and Brady, coming upon them suddenly, gathered that there had been a dispute.

"Has this guy been unbuttonin' his lip?" he demanded of Dollie.

Perhaps it was the heat, perhaps it was the memory of some of the things that Vinton had said. At any rate, there was a barely perceptible pause before Dollie languidly responded:

"He has been very annoying. I am glad you have come," she said.

Brady picked up a pebble and tossed it down the beach.

"Go after it," he urged. "You ain't wanted here, Bo. Notify your feet to get busy with your shoes and pedal hard."

"I presume you are trying to urge me to go away," suggested Vinton coldly.

"You've got a fine presumer," commended Brady. "Gear it up a little higher. It's runnin' too slow."

"I am grateful for your advice," said Vinton with sarcasm that appeared to be lost upon the other, "but it is not my intention to take myself off until Miss Darcy signifies to me that my presence here is unwelcome."

"You heard her say that you made her tired," reminded Brady. "Be a nice little boy, Bo, and go play in the next yard. There's a fine cellar door there. Go slide down it."

Vinton looked inquiringly at Dollie, but she made no sign. Brady was displaying a new phase of his many sided character and she found it rather interesting. Vinton, too, puzzled her, and she wanted to see what he would do.

She had not long to wait, for, with a final appeal to take a walk before his feet hurt him and he couldn't, Brady advanced toward his antagonist.

Short and sharp was the encounter. Brady struck first, and Vinton, nothing loath, responded. In both men the primal instinct was aroused, and they fought for the favor of a woman as men in the stone age fought.

For the moment Vinton forgot Dollie's presence, forgot everything except his desire to avenge the blow.

Brady had slipped off his glasses at the first sign of trouble and he was somewhat at a disadvantage, but for all of that he had the best of the fight, though Vinton had taken boxing lessons from an old champion and was accounted more than ordinarily skillful at the game.

They were on a strip of the beach little frequented in the evening and the encounter attracted no attention. In five minutes Vinton was down and out and Dollie was kneeling beside him in the sand seeking to restore him to consciousness. He opened his eyes presently and smiled into Dollie's anxious face.

"It's all right," he said weakly. "That little college student of yours has the skill of a professional prize fighter."

"Sure!" assented Brady. "You was goin' some, Bo, but your company was too fast. I used to be the Cherry hill maneater until me eyes went on the blink and I had to look for somethin' easier. I been teachin' the rah-rah boys to handle their hams lately. It's a puddin' alongside the other game. The doc told me to get some salt air for the summer an' I'm pickin' a piece of the coin while I'm doin' it. I fought Terry five rounds to a draw once," he added with pride.

"And now you are studying for college?" asked Dollie wonderingly.

"I was teachin'," explained the maneater. "I was professor of boxin'. What's all this row about college anyway? When the [illegible] me he says, 'I s'pose you come from college?' And I tell him I just come from there. Now you're hangin' on the same string."

[illegible]

[illegible] man to fight all right. There ain't many chaps like him that could give me the run he did. You back up."

"Thank you. I will take your advice," declared Dollie as she sank down on the sand beside Vinton, and seeing that he was no longer wanted the maneater slipped away rubbing his cauliflower ear reflectively.

"I hope he won't beat the little dame," he said musingly. "He sure can hit even if he can't lick me." And the maneater never realized that with Cupid as referee Paul was the winner after all.

A Vivid Description.

A shortsighted and deaf old gentleman who was at an entertainment where a professor performed on a big bass viol thus described the scene: "The professor carried on to the platform a gigantic beetle attached to the end of a sort of lamppost. He leaned over and fondly embraced it, tickling its back violently with a long comb.

"The spectators seemed much delighted at this display of scientific affection. The beetle was apparently quite unmoved. Then the professor gave a capital imitation of the drunken man and the lamppost. He swayed rapidly up and down, clutching quickly at all points.

"Sometimes his fingers quivered passionately upon one spot, like an ill tempered man struggling with an obstinate pair of braces. Sometimes he rested momentarily, as one rests after a contest with a stiff white tie.

"Finally he gave a last convulsive tickle to the huge beetle, picked himself up from the lamppost and carried off the unresisting insect. The audience applauded vigorously."

A Fluctuating Fortune.

"About how much do you figure that you are worth?" asked the old time friend.

"How do I know?" replied Mr. Cumrox. "Mother and the girls have joined a bridge whist club."—Washington Star.

Among the Exchanges

Twice each year every merchant takes account of stock. When the work is completed the storekeeper knows just where he stands. If a certain department in his store is losing money he plans on strengthening it or cutting it out altogether. If another department is making an unexpected success he specializes upon it and features it. He has what might be called a commercial housecleaning.

This fact has brought the thought to our minds that it might be a good thing for those of us who work for a living, to take account of stock at regular intervals, not making an inventory of ribbons, silks, etc., but of talents.

The influences of business life should trend to broaden and develop the mind, so that when one hears a business person mourn because he or she finds themselves in a groove or rut they should stop long enough to take stock.—Monessen News.

Kirk and Clark will commence the sale of the Wells' stock of Dry Goods at 50 cents off the dollar. This sale will be held in the Wells' store on Fifth street. Every hour will be a bargain hour. 1t2

Too Complicated.

Modern household improvements are appreciated by the initiated, but to the unenlightened they sometimes prove discouraging. Mrs. Gordon was showing Ina, the new maid, who had agreed to work for $4 a week, the conveniences of her up to date kitchen.

"It's a very easy place," explained the lady, "because I have so many contrivances for making the work light.

"Now, here's a new patent bread mixer. When you're ready to use it I'll show you how to put it together. And this is a splendid meat grinder. It saves hours of labor with the chopping knife. Here is a fine apple parer that takes the cores out too. And this [illegible] slab is a wonderful potato slicer.

"Then," continued Mrs. Gordon proudly, "I have a patent dishwasher, a percolating coffeepot and an automatic ash sifter."

The first draft of the [illegible]

A Daughter of Vesuvius.

By Pierce Vincent.

Copyrighted, 1906, by Associated Literary Press.

It was a small two edged stiletto that Zabetta Gemella bought at Antonio Mordo's shop in Naples, a very tiny plaything of a stiletto; but, as every Italian knows, the heart lies barely two inches below the surface and a blade that will reach that distance is long enough for all practical purposes.

On the crucifix handle of this particular stiletto Zabetta had sworn that it should drink the blood of either Caesar Pino or of his betrothed, Maria Vincenzo.

They were a very ancient family, the Gemellas. One ancestor had escaped from the eruption that overwhelmed Pompeii and another had been [illegible] at Herculaneum. The race had a certain fierce [illegible] inherited from those who have been [illegible] before Vesuvius.

vius." Her first view at dawn from her little attic was of the purple plume and mighty shoulders of the great volcano heaved against the sky, and her last glimpse at night was of the same plume streaming wildly across the sunset. She knew the mountain in all its moods and from its nature shaped her own. Its heart of fire was no wilder than that within her breast.

Caesar Pino belonged to the aristocracy of Boscotrase. His olive trees were the best in the place, and did not the choicest Lachryma Christi come from his grapes grown on the scoriae of Vesuvius? Caesar was dark and handsome, a fine singer and dancer, a hard worker, a good fellow all round. All the girls in the village were in love with him.

Handsome Caesar fell in love with handsomer Zabetta. True, her family was poor. But what difference did that make? Caesar had enough for both. Their betrothal soon followed. Nobody could deny that they made a fine looking pair. To be sure, some families whose daughters would not have objected to occupying Zabetta's place hinted privately at the record of the Gemellas. But none spoke openly, remembering that same record.

All went well until Maria Vincenzo came to Boscotrase. Then Caesar's affection for Zabetta cooled. [illegible]

[illegible]

Then came the great eruption.

For generations Vesuvius, muttering and grumbling, had looked down on the presumptuous vineyards and olive groves, boldly pressing nearer the region where it had decreed no living thing should grow. Unheeded it had given warning after warning, like a cross old man who is continually making threats, but whom no one takes at his word.

At last the giant that dwelt in the mountain's fiery heart decided that it was time to teach the forgetful race of men one lesson more. So pouf! He blew off the cone and descended in streams of lava and sheets of ashes.

Boscotrase was one of the worst sufferers. For a time its citizens hoped they might escape with a shower of stones and cinders. But one night the scarlet ribbons that had been trickling like rivers of blood down the rough slopes turned toward the village and flight was the only resource.

In a few hours Caesar had seen his vineyard and olive grove damaged beyond hope of reparation in his own lifetime. From a wealthy man he had become poor. Although he did not notice it, Maria's affection had cooled perceptibly from the moment when she realized that her lover was now no richer than his fellows.

Zabetta was gloomily preparing to flee from her home at the coming of the lava. To her whether she escaped or not mattered very little. The cataclysm without found a responsive echo in her heart, fiery, scorched and blasted.

With a small bundle of her belongings she was hurrying along the street amid the ashes and falling stones when a pale faced, shrieking figure rushed past her.

Zabetta's hand involuntarily sought her bosom, whence lurked the stiletto. She was alone with her hated rival. In that fearful semimidnight who would know if she slew Maria?

The other shrank back, seeing her stern face and guessing the import of her bosomed hand.

"Where is Caesar?" grimly questioned Zabetta. Maria cowered away.

"I left him at his house a little while ago. The lava was coming. As he entered to get a bundle the walls fell and buried him. I dared not go in. He is dead."

"Coward!" hissed Zabetta. Dropping her load, she gave the shrinking girl a push that hastened her flight, then flew back through the lurid gloom along the well known way that led to Caesar's house. Why she went she did not know. Caesar was dead to her, so her heart whispered. Yet instinct told her to hasten back.

Soon she saw the ruined house. Only a few rods away a red stream was rolling slowly down the street. She entered the tottering walls and beheld a prone figure partly buried under the fallen stones.

It was Caesar!

The peril of her former lover made Zabetta forgetful of her own danger and of the fact that he was the betrothed of another woman. Madly she tore with bleeding fingers at the debris that covered him. His heart was beating; he was alive. With strength increased tenfold she tugged at the wreckage until she had cleared away everything but a heavy block that pressed down the little finger of his right hand. This block resisted Zabetta's utmost efforts.

It was growing hotter and hotter. A few minutes more and the lava would engulf the house. Death would be the portion of any living thing therein. Zabetta drew her tiny dagger.

At that instant Caesar returned to consciousness. Seeing her bending over him, knife in hand, he gave a cry of terror and appeal and swooned again just as the blade descended. It severed his crushed finger at the second joint and he was free.

There was not a second to lose. Already the air was scorching. With a man's strength Zabetta lifted the insensible Caesar in her arms and carried him out into the street. Through the showers of ashes she staggered with her burden. She had not got fifty feet from the door when the lava boiled against the walls and the whole house fell in ruins.

But Caesar was saved!

So Zabetta kept her vow, sworn on the crucifix of the little dagger, that it should drink the blood of either Caesar or Maria. And it was probably the first instance on record where the fulfillment of a Gemella's blood oath resulted in a marriage.

The Don't Worry Theory.

The usual advice given to the worrier is, "Don't worry." This advice is foolish because impractical. No one can stop thinking one type of thought except by substituting for it another. Besides, it is dangerous advice, for, even supposing one could mechanically put an end to a worrying state of mind, he would simply be like an engineer who should plant himself on the safety valve of his engine. Advice to Anglers.

Of all the sports that many men
Are looking for and wishing
To take a hand in now and then
By far the best is fishing.

So get a rod and line and hook,
Impale a worm or cricket,
Strike for a river, lake or brook
In open land or thicket.

Should flies be thick or weather wet,
Pray, "don't get in a pucker."
Have patience, friend, and soon you'll get
A catfish, trout or sucker.

Should you take home when night appears
A little fish's corpus
Don't tell your friends in after years
'Twas big as any porpoise.
—A. L. L. in Forest and Stream.

A Modern Convenience.

A British lord of the admiralty whose knowledge of nautical detail was limited, was recently taking his first trip in a rather leaky vessel when he observed the men working the pumps. "Dear me," he said, "I did not know you had a well on board, captain, but I'm really glad you have, for I detest sea water!"—Harper's Weekly.

Quartet Of Main Ones Now Lodged At Washington

Yesterday the fourth of the quartet of leaders of the "Dirty Dozen" gang was taken to Washington by Constable Stablein, and placed in the hands of the Juvenile Court officials of that place. The lad whose name is Joseph DeMarco, a brother of the one taken last week, is but ten years of age, but has been eluding the Juvenile court officials here, and it was only by hard work that he was finally secured. This youngster in company with the three others from Charleroi already at Washington, will have a hearing in a few days and no doubt sent to some home. This disreputable gang of youngsters will now no doubt be broken up although there are two more lads, who is said will try to keep the organization alive. If anything more in the line of burglaries is heard from the band from now on there will be others apprehended also and have a hearing in the Juvenile court.

CONTRACT NOW IN HANDS OF GLASS COMPANY'S ATTORNEYS FOR APPROVAL

The contract which is to be signed by the Imperial Glass Company was drawn up yesterday by the Charleroi committee appointed for that purpose and sent to Pittsburg for the attorneys of the company to examine and sign. This will probably take a matter of three or four days before it is acted upon and returned to Charleroi. While it cannot be stated as a fact that matters will now go along without scarcely a hitch, it is thought that agreements can be reached without much effort.

The committee which had in charge the drafting of the contract was Messrs. J. K. Tener, R. H. Rush and Kerfoot W. Daly. Attorney D. M. McCloskey drew up the paper for them.

The committees in Charleroi can not do anything but wait until the contract is either signed or refused. It will hardly be the latter however. After that part of the work is done everything will be in good shape, and the principal part of the business done towards the preliminaries of having the Imperial company locate here.

To Build Store Buildings.

Contracts have been let by the Union Supply Company for erection of four store buildings in Fayette County. The buildings are to be located at the Ralph, the Sarah, the Palmer and the Filbert plants of the H. C. Frick Coke Company. A sign of the future prospects of the company is evidenced in the specifications which call for the buildings to be of brick and two stories high. It was only a few years ago that the stores of this company were entirely frame structures. The prospects for a half century of operations in the Fayette county district have caused the company to build permanent structures. The stores will be 80x100 feet in size, and will cost $15,000 each. The ground floor will be devoted to store rooms, while the second floors will be used as offices and storage rooms. Work will start on the building at once, and they will be completed before January 1. The contract price is $60,000 for the four structures.

FINLANDER JAILED FOR THIRTY DAYS REMAINS ONE HOUR

Released After Friends Pay Fine Of $1 And Costs.

Carel Macowitch, a Finlander, of Charleroi, had the unique distinction of serving a sentence in the county jail at Washington yesterday but for an hour, after having been sent up for 30 days. At a hearing before Justice Wilson, Macowitch was adjudged guilty of assault and battery, and sentenced to pay $1 and costs or go to jail for thirty days. The information was made by Steve Uhore. Not having the ready cash to pay the fine and costs which were considerable the man chose the latter, 30 days in jail and was taken over yesterday morning. Soon after the officer and his man had left some friends of Macowitch appeared and settled with the Justice by paying the fine and costs. A release was sent to Washington at once and the man was let go, returning to Chaleroi last night.

FAIRMONT GETS THE LAST ONE

Mr. Hunt Positively Refuses To Allow Liberties With His Benders.

W. HUMPHRIES HEAVES

Hit Hard Throughout Game—Bingles Thirteen Off Him.

Charleroi didn't take their batting eye to the park with them yesterday afternoon and as a consequence drew the short end with the Fairmont aggregation. One Mr. Hunt was the one to inform them that an exceptionally good eye would be needed and he kept his word by allowing four scattered singles, not a man getting past second base.

Willis Humphries was selected by Osborne as the heaver for the Cherubs. While he was touched up pretty lively in the first three rounds the Mountaineers did not cross the gum until the fourth, making one in this round on one for for three bases by Snodgrass and a clean single by Haught. They broke into the run column in the next round by Fisher singling and Hunt sacrificing him to second. Core made two on by getting soaked in the ribs and when Parker hit one run came over. In the sixth and seventh they drew blanks but in the eighth Keener thought it best to score and proceeded to drive the leather over the right field fence for the entire circuit. The next two men following Keener singled but the hit to score them failed to appear. In the ninth with one down, Core picked out a nice one, and to keep in the game King followed suit, sending Core to third, from where he scored on a drive by Parker, which also sent King to third. Keener tried hard for another safe one but popped up a foul which Dailey pulled in. Snodgrass ended the inning by flying to O'Hare. Score:

TRUE BILL FOUND IN INSURANCE CASE

Monongahela Men Defendants In Suit Brought By V. D. Shannon.

CALIFORNIA MAN HELD

Harry Paxton Must Undergo Trial For Forgery.

Important cases before the grand jury yesterday and in which true bills were found, were those of the commonwealth against J. T. Biddle and against Lee Hepler, both well known residents of Monongahela. They are charged with unlawfully transacting business as an agent of a foreign insurance copmany, and advertising as agents of an unauthorized insurance company. The private prosecutor in both prosecutions is V. D. Shannon of Fallowfield.

Messrs. Biddle and Hepler represented the Eureka Life Insurance company, incorporated under the laws of Virginia, and the prosecution is brought on the grounds that the Eureka Life Insurance company had not qualified in this state according to law and therefore was a foreign company, and had not a right to establish an office or offices or appoint agents in this state.

It is understood that the prosecutions grow out of dissatisfaction of parties who had taken stock in the insurance company represented by the defendants.

True bills were found in all the cases against Harry G. Paxton, of California, there being two counts in each case, he being charged with forgery and uttering and publishing false statements. He was caught in Charleroi a few months ago and taken to California where he was given a hearing. He furnished bail for court.

High School at Bentleyville.

Bentleyville, Aug. 13.—Examinations for the entrance to the new high school which will be established at this place, will be held at the public school building on September 4, by the teacher Prof. Charles McCormick, of Waynesburg. It is requested by the board of education that all persons in the borough or the adjoining townships who wish to enter the high school be present at this meeting to take the preliminary examinations.

This will be the first year of the high school in the borough and already a large number of students have stated that they will take the examinations for entrance. It is expected that the school will have a large class as the school is situated in a thriving community which appreciates the advantage of good educational facilities.

SPECIAL SIGNIFICANCE ATTACHED TO VISIT OF STEEL OFFICIALS

Significance is attached to the visit of Mr. Dinkey and two other head officials of the Carnegie Steel Company to Donora today, it being thought they are there to make arrangements for the reopening of the works which have been closed down for many months. These three men arrived this morning on the [illegible] at that place and left in automobiles for a tour of the town, after which they returned to the works near the railroad, and made a general review of the factory. Little information could be learned from the officials but it is generally thought that the trip to Donora will mean the starting of fires not later than the first of September, and probably sooner.

The Duquesne mills of the Carnegie company closed down very recently for two [illegible] during which time repairs will be made and that means that the works either at Donora or South Sharon will have to be started and indications point to the former.

METHODIST AND BAPTIST SUNDAY SCHOOLS PICNIC

Yesterday the Sunday schools from the Methodist and Baptist churches held their annual picnics at Lynns' Grove, near Belle Vernon, a large number attending and passing an enjoyable day in the woods. Special cars at 9 and 10 o'clock, conveying people to the grove, Both young and old attended and made merry by games of various kinds. In the morning a ball game was a feature, between the married and single men, and another contest was played in the afternoon. Races by the little folk in the afternoon proved an interesting diversion. Regular old fashioned picnic dinner and supper were served. The special cars for home left at 6 o'clock, although many persons becoming tired left before that time.

FINLEYVILLE IS CERTAINLY DRY

During the entire summer the region about Finleyville has had but little rain, getting but a sprinkle when other parts of the county were deluged and as a result a water famine has set in. The Nottingham mine has been forced to suspend on account of lack of water. An attempt was made to continue by using sulphur water from a creek, in the boilers but this was found impossible as the action of the sulphur soon put the machinery out of business. The B. and O. railroad company is also in need of water and unless rain comes soon they will be forced to haul water from the regions of plenty.

The draught extends for a considerable distance on either side of Finleyville and is causing the farmers in that immediate vicinity considerable worry on account of their grain crops. This will be the first very dry spell for nearly three years and it will be remembered three years ago the railroad company was forced to haul water. Tanks for the watering of passenger trains are located at Finleyville.

ENTHUSIASTIC MEETING OF VARIOUS COMMITTEES

The committees having in charge the preparations for the Old Home Week at Monongahela, beginning September 7, held a meeting last night and various reports were heard. The finance committee gave a most excellent report, funds coming in surprisingly. The contract for the erection of a court of Honor was let.

GUTHRIE CASE VS B. AND O. TO BE HEARD SOON

The suit of Millard G. Guthrie and Elizabeth Guthrie against the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad company an action for the recovery of the sum of $10,000 damages on account of the killing of the Guthrie child at the Bell avenue crossing, Claysville, will likely be heard in the United States circuit court.

McIlvaine and Clark, attorneys for the railroad company yesterday presented a petition to the court praying for an order for removing the case to the United States circuit. Accompanying the petition was a bond for $10,000 for the company's entering in the court on the first day of its next session and for paying all costs that may be awarded by the court, if the court shall hold that the case was wrongfully or improperly removed thereto.

ROYAL ARCANUM, 1240, ENTERTAINS FOR ITS MEMBERS

Charleroi lodge 1240, Royal Arcanum last evening after the regular semi-monthly business meeting held a social session, which was one of the most enjoyable affairs ever given by the order to its members here. Three candidates were initiated District Deputy Eisler having charge of the initating. A large number of guests were present from Monongahela, Elizabeth, Belle Vernon and Fayette City. The Royal Arcanum quartet entertained with several selections, and there was some instrumental music.

The Royal Arcanum lodge, 1240, now numbers 145 members, and is still growing. It is one of the most prosperous and thriving orders of the town.

Let Us Honor Them.

During next week in different parts of the country two reunions of veterans will be held, one of the few remaining survivors of the Ringgold cavalry, that body of brave men which rendered service of such everlasting benefit to their country in the great war between the North and South, and the other the 54th and 63rd regiments of the volunteers of Pennsylvania, in the struggle of the sixties, the American Veterans of Foreign Service and United States Reserves of the more recent Spanish-American War. The Ringgold command naturally will claim the most attention of the people in this section for the reason that it was principally from these parts that body of staunch men was chosen; also for the reason of their reunion which was held in Charleroi last year in the month of August. This year West Middletown have the distinction of entertaining the Ringgold men, the date being August 20. There are a very few of this command now living and those that do survive are gray haired and feeble.

The reunion of the other commands is in charge of the American Veterans of Foreign service and the United States Reserves who are doing a most praiseworthy thing in affording an opportunity for their older comrades, members of the 54th and 63rd, Vols. Pa., who served in the war of the rebellion, a chance to again meet with each other and clasp hands with their old mates, possibly for the last time. Quite a number of those who have seen service, of the Monongahela Valley will attend this monster reunion at Olympia park and not only try to have a good time themselves but furnish enjoyment for their comrades whether young or old. Let us honor them all.

Monessen this week has a bad attack. Of what, did you say? Oh, yes, a carnival, of course. The aggregation is known, when they're out of debt and on the road with prospects of doing a big business and hauling in cash and over hand, as the Smith [illegible] Carnival Company, spectacular, stupendous nerve-thrilling awe-inspiring, biggest on the face of the globe, [illegible] etc. Charleroi had an attack last year and has succeeded in getting over it after a long period of convalescence. [illegible]coe, Brownsville, California and other towns along the river which have had adjectival affairs of the kind for a few days during the summer, in their midst are just now recovering. What the people of those villages say of carnivals is a plenty. It's more nerve-thrilling and awe-inspiring than the immense, (per add manager) show itself, to hear them say lovely, no, but hard things, tempered with a few expressions not found in the old Mosaic law.

DOLLIE AND THE MANEATER.

By Colin S. Collins.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

"I can't help it because I am rich, can I?"

Paul Vinton spoke of his wealth as though it were a thing accursed. Dollie Darcy shook her head with judicial solemnity.

"I don't suppose that you can," she admitted. "At the same time, Paul, you cannot blame me for taking an interest in people who do things."

"Such as waiting on table?" retorted Vinton. "I don't see anything to command respectful admiration in a job like that."

"But he is a college man," reminded Dollie. "Just fancy a student so anxious to learn that he will wait on table in a hotel to gain the funds for his tuition!"

"He would do well to go to a grammar school first," growled Vinton. "He waited on me this morning and when I asked for eggs he told me that 'the eggs isn't very fresh.' That's good grammar for a college student, and then his slang is something weird."

"George Ade uses slang," cited Dollie defensively. "I'm sure that no one ever accused Mr. Ade of being common."

"Because he keeps his slang for his books and plays," reminded Vinton.

Dollie checked the sharp speech that sprang to her lips and hurried down the piazza steps to join a bespectacled youth who appeared around the corner of the hotel.

He was not an inviting sort of person. One ear was considerably larger [illegible]

[illegible] seemed the most forlorn and [illegible] one in the lot. There was something almost pathetic to her in the idea of this man who maltreated the English language so brutally seeking a higher education, and she found his personality interesting and at times amusing.

There were other times when the man bored her sadly, but she would not confess that she found him tiresome lest Paul should think the victory lay with him.

Every evening when the tables had been cleared and the dining room put in order Brady would slip down to the beach and walk or sit with Dollie, while Vinton sat on the piazza and vowed that he would leave the place for some better resort where the waiters were not the fad of the moment.

He never went, for on second thoughts he told himself it would be better to stay on and look after Dollie. She must tire of her fad presently, and perhaps on the rebound he might induce her to say the coveted "Yes."

Dismally Vinton realized that the waiting game was bound to be a long one, and chancing upon Dollie waiting on the sands for her waiter protege Paul was moved to reopen his argument.

Following an unusually hot day the humidity of an approaching storm deprived the sufferers of the relief of the night breezes. Dollie was tired and irritable and in no frame of mind for an argument. Both raised their voices slightly above the pitch of good breeding, and Brady, coming upon them suddenly, gathered that there had been a dispute.

"Has this guy been unbuttonin' his lip?" he demanded of Dollie.

Perhaps it was the heat, perhaps it was the memory of some of the things that Vinton had said. At any rate, there was a barely perceptible pause before Dollie languidly responded:

"He has been very annoying. I am glad you have come," she said.

Brady picked up a pebble and tossed it down the beach.

"Go after it," he urged. "You ain't wanted here, Bo. Notify your feet to get busy with your shoes and pedal hard."

"I presume you are trying to urge me to go away," suggested Vinton coldly.

"You've got a fine presumer," commended Brady. "Gear it up a little higher. It's runnin' too slow."

"I am grateful for your advice," said Vinton with sarcasm that appeared to be lost upon the other, "but it is not my intention to take myself off until Miss Darcy signifies to me that my presence here is unwelcome."

"You heard her say that you made her tired," reminded Brady. "Be a nice little boy, Bo, and go play in the next yard. There's a fine cellar door there. Go slide down it."

Vinton looked inquiringly at Dollie, but she made no sign. Brady was displaying a new phase of his many sided character and she found it rather interesting. Vinton, too, puzzled her, and she wanted to see what he would do.

She had not long to wait, for, with a final appeal to take a walk before his feet hurt him and he couldn't, Brady advanced toward his antagonist.

Short and sharp was the encounter. Brady struck first, and Vinton, nothing loath, responded. In both men the primal instinct was aroused, and they fought for the favor of a woman as men in the stone age fought.

For the moment Vinton forgot Dollie's presence, forgot everything except his desire to avenge the blow.

Brady had slipped off his glasses at the first sign of trouble and he was somewhat at a disadvantage, but for all of that he had the best of the fight, though Vinton had taken boxing lessons from an old champion and was accounted more than ordinarily skillful at the game.

They were on a strip of the beach little frequented in the evening and the encounter attracted no attention. In five minutes Vinton was down and out and Dollie was kneeling beside him in the sand seeking to restore him to consciousness. He opened his eyes presently and smiled into Dollie's anxious face.

"It's all right," he said weakly. "That little college student of yours has the skill of a professional prize fighter."

"Sure," assented Brady. "You was goin' some, Bo, but your company was too fast. I used to be the Cherry hill maneater until me eyes went on the blink and I had to look for somethin' easier. I been teachin' the rah-rah boys to handle their hams lately. It's a puddin' alongside the other game. The doc told me to get some salt air for the summer an' I'm pickin' a piece of the coin while I'm doin' it. I fought Terry five rounds to a draw once," he added with pride.

"And now you are studying for college?" asked Dollie wonderingly.

"I was teachin'," explained the maneater. "I was professor of boxin'. What's all this row about college anyway? When the boss [illegible] he says, 'I s'pose you came from college?' And I told him I just came from there. Now you're laughin' at the same thing."

[illegible]

[illegible] man to tie to, all right. There ain't many chaps like him that could give me the run he did. You hook up."

"Thank you. I will take your advice," declared Dollie as she sank down on the sand beside Vinton, and seeing that he was no longer wanted the maneater slipped away, rubbing his cauliflower ear reflectively.

"I hope he won't beat the little dame," he said musingly. "He sure can hit, even if he can't lick me." And the maneater never realized that with Cupid as referee Paul was the winner after all.

A Vivid Description.

A shortsighted and deaf old gentleman who was at an entertainment where a professor performed on a big bass viol thus described the scene: "The professor carried on to the platform a gigantic beetle attached to the end of a sort of lamppost. He leaned over and fondly embraced it, tickling its back violently with a long comb.

"The spectators seemed much delighted at this display of scientific affection. The beetle was apparently quite unmoved. Then the professor gave a capital imitation of the drunken man and the lamppost. He swayed rapidly up and down, clutching quickly at all points.

"Sometimes his fingers quivered passionately [illegible] tempered man struggling with an obstinate pair of braces. Sometimes he rested momentarily, as one rests after a contest with a stiff white tie.

"Finally he gave a last convulsive tickle to the huge beetle, picked himself up from the lamppost and carried off the unresisting insect. The audience applauded vigorously."

A Fluctuating Fortune.

"About how much do you figure that you are worth?" asked the old time friend.

"How do I know?" replied Mr. Cumrox. "Mother and the girls have joined a bridge whist club."—Washington Star.

Among the Exchanges

Twice each year every merchant takes account of stock. When the work is completed the storekeeper knows just where he stands. If a certain department in his store is losing money he plans on strengthening it or cutting it out altogether. If another department is making an unexpected success he specializes upon it and features it. He has what might be called a commercial housecleaning.

This fact has brought the thought to our minds that it might be a good thing for those of us who work for a living, to take account of stock at regular intervals, not making an inventory of ribbons, silks, etc., but of talents.

The influences of business life should trend to broaden and develop the mind, so that when one hears a business person mourn because he or she finds themselves in a groove or rut they should stop long enough to take stock.—Monessen News.

Too Complicated.

Modern household improvements are appreciated by the initiated, but to the unenlightened they sometimes prove discouraging. Mrs. Gordon was showing Ina, the new maid, who had agreed to work for $4 a week, the conveniences of her up to date kitchen.

"It's a very easy place," explained the lady, "because I have so many contrivances for making the work light.

"Now, here's a new patent bread mixer. When you're ready to use it I'll show you how to put it together. And this is a splendid meat grinder. It saves hours of labor with the chopping knife. Here is a fine apple parer that takes the cores out too. And this hardwood slab is a wonderful potato slicer.

"Then," continued Mrs. Gordon proudly, "I have a patent dishwasher, a percolating coffeepot and an automatic ash sifter."

"Missis," said Ina firmly, "ef I is to spend all mye time learning how to make dese fenny t'ings go I must hav' f'ive dollar a mont' more. She vor too much vork."—Youth's Companion.

The Constitution.

The first draft of the constitution contained an enumeration of the [illegible]

A Daughter of Vesuvius.

By Pierce Vincent.

Copyrighted, 1906, by Associated Literary Press.

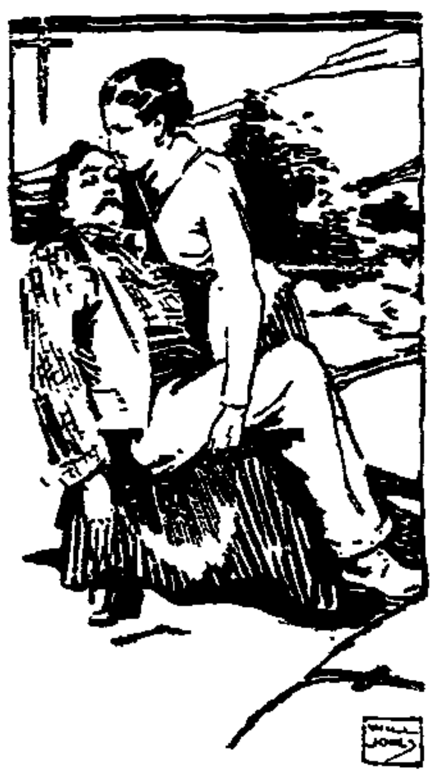
It was a small two edged stiletto that Zabetta Gemella bought at Antonio Mordo's shop in Naples, a very tiny plaything of a stiletto; but, as every Italian knows, the heart lies barely two inches below the surface and a blade that will reach that distance is long enough for all practical purposes.

On the crucifix handle of this particular stiletto Zabetta had sworn that it should drink the blood of either Caesar Pino or of his betrothed, Maria Vincento.

They were a very ancient family, the Gemellas. One ancestor had escaped from the eruption that overwhelmed Pompeii and another had been [illegible] at Herculaneum. The race had a certain fierce [illegible] inherited from some [illegible] before [illegible]

[illegible] vius. Her first view at dawn from her little attic was of the purple plume and mighty shoulders of the great volcano heaved against the sky, and her last glimpse at night was of the same plume streaming wildly across the sunset. She knew the mountain in all its moods and from its nature shaped her own. Its heart of fire was no wilder than that within her breast.

Caesar Pino belonged to the aristocracy of Boscotrase. His olive trees were the best in the place, and did not the choicest Lachryma Christi come from his grapes grown on the scoriae of Vesuvius? Caesar was dark and handsome, a fine singer and dancer, a hard worker, a good fellow all round. All the girls in the village were in love with him.



ZABETTA LIFTED THE INSENSIBLE CAESAR IN HER ARMS.

Handsome Caesar fell in love with handsomer Zabetta. True, her family was poor. But what difference did that make? Caesar had enough for both. Their betrothal soon followed. Nobody could deny that they made a fine looking pair. To be sure, some families whose daughters would not have objected to occupying Zabetta's place hinted privately at the record of the Gemellas. But none spoke openly, remembering that same record.

All went well until Maria Vincento came to Boscotrase. Then Caesar's affection for Zabetta cooled. [illegible]

[illegible] to restrain [illegible] from putting the sentence into immediate execution.

Then came the great eruption.

For generations Vesuvius, muttering and grumbling, had looked down on the presumptuous vineyards and olive groves, boldly pressing nearer the region where it had decreed no living thing should grow. Unheeded it had given warning after warning, like a cross old man who is continually making threats, but whom no one takes at his word.

At last the giant that dwelt in the mountain's fiery heart decided that it was time to teach the forgetful race of men one lesson more. So pouf! He blew off the cone and descended in streams of lava and sheets of ashes.

Boscotrase was one of the worst sufferers. For a time its citizens hoped they might escape with a shower of stones and cinders. But one night the scarlet ribbons that had been trickling like rivers of blood down the rough slopes turned toward the village and flight was the only resource.

In a few hours Caesar had seen his vineyard and olive grove damaged beyond hope of reparation in his own lifetime. From a wealthy man he had become poor. Although he did not notice it, Maria's affection had cooled perceptibly from the moment when she realized that her lover was now no richer than his fellows.

Zabetta was gloomily preparing to flee from her home at the coming of the lava. To her whether she escaped or not mattered very little. The cataclysm without found a responsive echo in her heart, fiery, scorched and blasted.

With a small bundle of her belongings she was hurrying along the street amid the ashes and falling stones when a pale faced, shrieking figure rushed past her.

Zabetta's hand involuntarily sought her bosom, whence lurked the stiletto. She was alone with her hated rival. In that fearful semimidnight who would know if she slew Maria?

The other shrank back, seeing her stern face and guessing the import of her bosomed hand.

"Where is Caesar?" grimly questioned Zabetta. Maria cowered away.

"I left him at his house a little while ago. The lava was coming. As he entered to get a bundle the walls fell and buried him. I dared not go in. He is dead."

"Coward!" hissed Zabetta. Dropping her load, she gave the shrinking girl a push that hastened her flight, then flew back through the lurid gloom along the well known way that led to Caesar's house. Why she went she did not know. Caesar was dead to her, so her heart whispered. Yet instinct told her to hasten back.

Soon she saw the ruined house. Only a few rods away a red stream was rolling slowly down the street. She entered the tottering walls and beheld a prone figure partly buried under the fallen stones.

It was Caesar!

The peril of her former lover made Zabetta forgetful of her own danger and of the fact that he was the betrothed of another woman. Madly she tore with bleeding fingers at the debris that covered him. His heart was beating; he was alive. With strength increased tenfold she tugged at the wreckage until she had cleared away everything but a heavy block that pressed down the little finger of his right hand. This block resisted Zabetta's utmost efforts.

It was growing hotter and hotter. A few minutes more and the lava would engulf the house. Death would be the portion of any living thing therein. Zabetta drew her tiny dagger.

At that instant Caesar returned to consciousness. Seeing her bending over him, knife in hand, he gave a cry of terror and appeal and swooned again just as the blade descended. It severed his crushed finger at the second joint and he was free.

There was not a second to lose. Already the air was scorching. With a man's strength Zabetta lifted the insensible Caesar in her arms and carried him out into the street. Through the showers of ashes she staggered with her burden. She had not got fifty feet from the door when the lava boiled against the walls and the whole house fell in ruins.

But Caesar was saved!

So Zabetta kept her vow, sworn on the crucifix of the little dagger, that it should drink the blood of either Caesar or Maria. And it was probably the first instance on record where the fulfillment of a Gemella's blood oath resulted in a marriage.

The Don't Worry Theory.

The usual advice given to the worrier is, "Don't worry." This advice is foolish because impractical. No one can stop thinking one type of thought except by substituting for it another. Besides, it is dangerous advice, for, even supposing one could mechanically put an end to a worrying state of mind, he would simply be like an engineer who should clamp himself on the safety valve of his engine. Advice to Anglers.

Of all the sports that many men
Are looking for and wishing
To take a hand in now and then
By far the best is fishing.

So get a rod and line and hook,
Impale a worm or cricket,
Strike for a river, lake or brook
In open land or thicket.

Should flies be thick or weather wet,
Pray, "don't get in a pucker."
Have patience, friend, and soon you'll get
A catfish, trout or sucker.

Should you take home when night appears
A little fish's corpus
Don't tell your friends in after years
'Twas big as any porpoise.
—A. L. L. in Forest and Stream.

A Modern Convenience.

A British lord of the admiralty whose knowledge of nautical detail was limited, was recently taking his first trip in a rather leaky vessel when he observed the men working the pumps. "Dear me," he said, "I did not know you had a well on board, captain, but I'm really glad you have, for I detest sea water!"—Harper's Weekly.

Quartet Of Main Ones Now Lodged At Washington

Yesterday the fourth of the quartet of leaders of the "Dirty Dozen" gang was taken to Washington by Constable Stablein, and placed in the hands of the Juvenile Court officials of that place. The lad whose name is Joseph DeMarco, a brother of the one taken last week, is but ten years of age, but has been eluding the Juvenile court officials here, and it was only by hard work that he was finally secured. This youngster in company with the three others from Charleroi already at Washington, will have a hearing in a few days and no doubt sent to some home. This disreputable gang of youngsters will now no doubt be broken up although there are two more lads, who is said will try to keep the organization alive. If anything more in the line of burglaries is heard from the band from now on there will be others apprehended also and have a hearing in the Juvenile court.
